

BEING CAMI CAT...

Reward.

Cami, and children like her, will expect to be recognised and rewarded when she does well. Cami is likely to view rewards in a transactional rather than an emotional manner. She will recognise and reward others in the same way. Cami can seem hard to impress and her expectation of reward can, at times, make her seem arrogant but this is simply an extension of her direct and straight to the point way of communicating. It can be useful to ask children like Cami what they would like as a reward or how they would like to be recognised to ensure best outcomes.

Criticism.

Cami and children like her will respond well to criticism as long as it is justified and delivered in a practical and focused fashion. Cami is always keen to improve herself, to do her best work and be her best version of herself. She is likely to respond quietly. She may have questions but she will reflect and implement any advice or guidance you provide.

Communication.

Cami Cat is very straight to the point. Although this can, at times seem abrupt, she is never unfair and her communication is always designed to create and maintain good, long and healthy relationships. Cami, and children like her, will find it useful to receive information in the same way they share it. They appreciate direct and to the point communication with clarity around the expectations you have of them. Like Cami, they will likely have lots of questions that they will need answering before they are able to act on information or instruction you provide them with.

Support.

Cami Cat often feels emotionally unavailable and it can feel that it is difficult to know if she wants support from others or how it would be appropriate to engage with her. When Cami, and children like her, know what they need, they will likely tell you. When they don't know how they are feeling or what they need, they can seem detached. It is likely that Cami will struggle to be or show vulnerability and asking for help, but not knowing what that help looks like, will be very difficult for them. Using story telling with children like Cami can be hugely beneficial - giving them characters or ideas that they can relate to, and learn from.

Play.

Cami Cat loves learning through play. She loves exploring and relishes in imaginative play. She is able to invent things and develop ideas to play within often complex and sophisticated games. Play is Cami's favourite way of learning and you may find that children like Cami show particular interest in humanities subjects. Cami and children like her are happy to play alone and like to lead when they play in groups.

Cami Cat is very agreeable. She is a good friend to many. Her inquisitive and curious nature makes her very astute and exciting to be around but can sometimes get her into trouble. She can be very dominant which makes her a good but not always considerate leader. She is very protective of her own well being and reputation and can, at times, hurt those that may damage them.
